THE HEART OF WOMAN. Addressed to a gentleman who had boasted in the author's hearing that it was easy to read the necret thoughts of a woman's heart. Go ' rash and presumptuous, the efforts are vain, Unequal thy attermost art, Of woman, loved woman, the knowledge to gain,

Or fathem the thoughts of her heart. Go measure the sunbeams that visit the earth, And usher in heavenly day; count all the insects to which they give birth As they bask in each luminous ray;

Tell the grains that the future full barvest will yield, The grass blades the meadows will bring; And crop all the flowers of the wide spreading field.

That bloom on the bosom of spring. Go number the dew-drops that fall from the trees

When swept by the breath of the morn, And gather the leaves, when the wintry breeze, The beautiful foliage hath shorn. Go tell all the globules that live in each wave

Of ocean, wherever he roars; And count the sauds that his wide waters lave, From Greenland's to India's shores.

Go visit the planets, that balane'd on high Wheel ceaseless and rapid through air; And darting through ether, return from the sky, And their names and their numbers declare

But the heart of a woman! Oh! wink not ford Can ever be fathom'd by thee; scept she unfold it, in vain may 'st thou scan,

Its mazes thou never shall see CORNELIA. THE LAPIDARY'S SONG breezes that sport thro' the emerald grove, brea he a fond thought to the girl that I love e, hence, roving adours go Zephyrs and tell O, tell her I love her, my foud Isabel. On her ringlets of topaz allay thy soft wing, Her bosom of chalk is the dwelling of spring; Her sapphirine orbs are in diamonds enchased, With the shadowy tints of the chrysolite graced. On her cheek the mild tinge of the amethyst plays, And garnets and rubies upon her lips blaze : In vain may the jewels of Mexico vie With the tints that illumine my Isabel's eve. And long med in vain may Paruviane spek A ruby to rival my label's check. Could I press the bright jewel thro' life to these

I'd adore the fond relique when fished the charms Tho' hardship should scourge me, and ages should Isabelta would still be the gem of my soul But go coving odours, go Zephyrs and till, D. tell her I love her, my fond Isabel.

JERNUS.

Can I torget the smile that thrill'd My soul with rapture when we met Can I forget the sigh that fill'd My anguish'd breast with keen regret. When fate ordain'd that we should part,

And sever'd forms but not the heart ? Tho' stern the mandate, and the thought, That we so soon should bid farewell, The fairy spell that hope had wrought-Beighten'd the tear-drop as it fell, oth'd the pang that rent my breast, And hush'd the tumuit into rest.

Where'er my wand'ring footsteps stray, Thy gentle aspect beams before me; And when in slamber steep'd I lay, The lovely vision hovers o'er me. That fortune's smile will banish fear.

But slumber's dreams as fleeting are As morning's must before the sun, And home, though 'tis life's brightest star. Oft lures us on to be undone Vet sweet illusions who can fly. Or from the rainbow turn the ere.

A happy New Year. This is the hope of every heart-the congratulation of every tongue. The prosperous wish for a continuget in the general joy, that time has furrowed gone forever! their cheeks, and taken away the strength of their limbs. Parents are made happy by beholding the gaiety of their children. Youth revels in present enjoyment, reckless alike of is a season of soher reflection. reproach us with non-performance! Have we not forgotten to serve God, according to the covenants we made with him, in the hour of adversity, when He graciously assisted us in ouse-and also to pray to him in our secret chamber ? Is there no unkindness towards our friends, no bitterness of spirit cherished against our enemies to be repented of? Have we exercised justice in our dealings one with another, and charity to the failings of our loss of influence, and even the souther, and charity to the failings of our loss of character can destroy. As the triumph brethren-employed our talents to the best of her children is her own, so is their downfall of our knowledge-sympathized with the af. and their dislonor. Alas! for human frailty-well may we exclaim, "we have broken thy covenants. thrown down thine altais, and destroyed thy prophets, and it is of thy mercies oh, God! that we are not destroyed!" The best of us have much to be sorry for .- " There is none righteous, no-not one !" And, " verily there fare of her children. is a God that judgeth the earth, who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity." Callous and hardened must be the heart of that child, who can behold without powerful emotion the who can behold without powerful emotion the memorials of a deceased parent. No! the heart must swell, sand the eye must weep, when we visit the closet, where we conversed with God together, and find it the abode of solitude and desolation of heart—when we look on the days that are to come, and behold the dark current of existence strewed with the wreck of our hopes and ruined schemes, the wreck of our hopes and ruined so and feel that we must travel in lo along the pathway of being bereft of those, who, by sharing, heightened our pleasures-and who, by diverting, alleviated our sorrows

The proceeding day had been one devoted to sorrow, for the last remains of a beloved and neld a wilderness of woods, the trees of which lamented father were deposited in the sepul ed brighter than azure and glischre of departed spirits. I returned from his grave mourning internally—no tear started from my eye, yet an oppressive weight of agony tened like liquid fire; the shores thereof seem-ed composed of particles of fine gold; a little further on might be seen the fadeless amaranthine bowers waving with the balmy breeze of heaven—there also countless millions of restill to grown upon my ear-I strove to lose myself in wild imagination, but in vain, the corpse of my father still appeared before me, pale and emaciated, his last groan seemed rol-ling across my brain like a spectre dark and ominous. Language cannot express how dearly I loved my father; he was the only presult, the only relation, indiced, I had ever known the history of our family is brief and melancholy; therefore is it that I repeat it here:— My father was the second son of a proud and choly; therefore is it that I repeat it here:—
My father was the second son of a proud and mercenary nobleman, he became early in life faithfully attached to a young lady of superior merits, but impoverished family; she was all that man should desire in a female, beautiful, amiable and intelligent; he soon inspired a mutual feeling in her breast, and precipitately desclosed his love to his parent, at the same

Fortune smiled propitiously upon the exertions of my father on the shores of the AN ORIGINAL TALE. The sun was near an hour high, and a few ves-is were seen pursuing their course slong the the exertions of my father on the shores of the new world, until in gaining a son, he lost his better half my mother. I saw not my father's overwhelming grief at this calamity, but often have I sighed in sympathy of soul at his pa-therlinglescription of her death, and as often hung with fapture upon his words as he recitat the helm, stood an aged scaman whose white locks fluttering in the breeze, proclaimed that he already had passed the meredian of life impassionately concentrated in myself, still a sacred sadness ever afterwards spread a gloom over his features—methinks I can see him now with the eye of mind, his placid yet noble his calm blue eye was almost constantly fixed on the compass, and when the yawing of the vessel caused the magnetic card to revolve its pivot, gently touching the tiller he won bring her back to her destined course. No countenance beaming in all the eloquence of virtue, as the precepts of morality fell from his paternal lips. Excuse this tribute to a futher's memory, gentle reader, and I return to the morning after his burial - fatigued by a tumult and then as his eye wandered around the horizon and perceived that his own vessel was far ahead of every other, the muscles of his wea-ther-beaten countenance would contract as a of decreesed feelings, tree insture's sweet re-storer fled my pallow, horrid phantoms flitted across my unagination, and clouds of sorrowgleam of satisfaction played for a moment on his honest face. # HUMAN DEPRAVITY

To the philanthropist who contemplates with an impartial eye, circumstances as they really exist, this world presents a scoot replete with horror, misery and degradation; whether he glances over the pages of history and views the actions of men who were des-tined to wield the sceptre and wear the crown, who at their nod can summon mathons to their presence, or by their frown can shake the fates of empires, or whether he turns ids ey-to the humble and more degraded walks of to the humble and more degraded walks of life, where the light of science and true religion never shone, he beholds the same massions, the same feelings, and the same motives influencing the mind of man. At one time, he sees powerful nations arrayed against each other in contest, and thristing for each others blood; and at another, he beholds the lacking assassin, urged on by the same ambition, and atimulated by the same revenge. Considerable excitement of a political natuae, appears to exist in the state of Virginia; Mr. Handolph, so long and well known to the sublic, has been promoted from the House of epresentatives to the Senate, and an election now to be held for a member to supply his place: among those who are brought forward this purpose is the far-famed William B. elles, although living out of the District which is to be represented, so important is considered the "crisis," as it is gravely anounced, to which we as a nation, are brought although in almost every other section of the country all is quiet and undisturbed, and the olive branch of peace, with the attendant blewings of prosperity and happiness is represented as holding undisputed sway, yet, to judge from the alarming tone which our Virgonia politicians have assumed, one might fairly infer, that we were almost tottering on the fairly infer, that we were almost tottering on the fairly infer, that we were almost tottering on the fairly infer, that we were almost tottering on the fairly infer to the fairly for a creating the fairly f the verge of ruin; that much more cause existed for wailings and lamentations than for recipion. One of the candidates in offering rejoicing. One of the candidates in offering mself, asserts that "this fearfully consolidating government has assumed a jurisdiction of sutting and using the soil of the states at of cutting and using the soil of the states at their pleasure; then their jurisdiction must conflict with the jurisdiction of the states, and if they do conflict, which will maintain its carbon acceptance of on the lowest terms for contract of the will dispose of on the lowest terms for carbon acceptance.

divine idea, saw him depart with silent admi-tation. He returned to his friends, and very soon had a second, third, and fourth hought. A wag, suspecting the frequency of St. Ceci-lia's vists, followed idanded to an adjoining room, saw him enter a chief, embrase hishes haved champago, and swallow repeated doses. The discovery communicated infinite mirth to the company, and Hundel's lought became proverbal. must arrive, when there is to be a conflict of powers, agreeably to the latitudinarian doctrine? Who is to bend the knee, the states or the general government? Here an awful gulph, a hideous chasm, is presented to our view. Will not this latitudinarian government be responsible to you, and mankind, and the God of Nature, who has so greatly blessed you with the highest boon, for the destruction of the Ark of Leberty—(The Constitution.)—God forbid, that, that day should ever arrive! but that day has been predicted by a Henry, you with the nightest boon, for the destruction of the Ark of Liberty—(The Constitution.)— God forbid, that, that day should ever arrive but that day has been predicted by a Henry, by the now hving sages, and best patriots of the present day. Should the present doctrine, helden by the administration at Washington, go into effect, it will then become our best efforts to do our duty by ourselves, and to those who are to live, to inherit our free institutions, to stand against the present storm; "to breast it with that firmness, which will be calculated to stem its force, and reader it harmless."

"Why should the general government, whose arm is already so strong, so rich in resources, ever exercise doubtful powers? But here, where there can be no doubt, that the power never was intended to be given.—Why usurp? Origit not the administration at Washington to reflect, that the exercise of powers not granted, is not the way to conciliate the feet.

origit not the summistration at Washington to reflect, that the exercise of powers not carried in the carried i rights, loving their liberty and their constitu-tion, and hating only those who revere not the constitution, and love not the liberty the result thereof."

The same subject is touched on by the man terly spirit of Clinton, in his late message to the New York legislature, but in a tone of moderation which it were well, if with a similar force and wisdom, it could be manifested chewhere. He observes, that "While it is our imperative daty to support the National government in all its constitutional functions and patriotic demonstrations, we are equally bound to sustain the just rights and legitimate authorities of the states. The one is intimate, by blended with our power and safety, and the other is identified with the preservation of free government. They are component and free government. They are component and essential parts of the same magnificent system, and the pillars can never be destroyed with out a subversion of the whole edifice."

ceive by the Penn. Intelligencer, has recently been addressing the citizens of Harrisbury sible, and appears to have become a convert to the concave system. It is said he founds his arguments upon facts well established in natu least very plausible. Mr. R. is represented as respectability, and particularly pleasing as a uch an elucidation of the subject as will en Able us to form an opinion for ourselves.
